Attitude! Teresa and Priscilla (pictured) share a can-do, upbeat ability to make things happen. Four-year old Teresa’s enthusiasm convinced her impoverished mother to find a way to send her to pre-school, and now—with your support through Global Sojourns Giving Circle (GSGC)—this spunky, bright child can go on to elementary, high school and beyond. But in her village, many girls are born to similarly challenged mothers who never learned the value of education. These girls play unsupervised in the street, or help with household chores and younger siblings. Statistically, without intervention, many will begin their own families in about 10 years, continuing a cycle of poverty. But, thanks to you, Teresa is on a different path.

GSGC’s founder, Priscilla Plummer Macy, shares Teresa’s positive attitude. Living in sub-Saharan Africa for 12 years, Priscilla has observed the untapped pool of talent that results from the inequality of education for girls and boys. In 2006 she boldly asked friends in the U.S. to help her fund education for some of Africa’s most vulnerable yet promising girls, and GSGC was formed. Developing an international organization isn’t easy. But Priscilla—in concert with our African partners and each of GSGC’s supporters—has proven successful in three countries.

GSGC currently works in partnership with eight on-the-ground, grassroots organizations in Africa. Each is passionate, knows the local community thoroughly, and their GSGC-funded programs have allowed hundreds of girls to enter or remain in school. GSGC’s focus is narrow but deep. We provide required school uniforms and fees, and offer after-school tutoring and mentoring programs. We fund career seminars, weekend empowerment clubs and field trips to help keep girls motivated and engaged. But we don’t stop there. GSGC trains our partners in record keeping, grant writing, accounting, computers, networking, communications and business principles—making their efforts that much more sustainable. Recently GSGC began teaching men and boys the value of an education for their sisters, daughters, neighbors and future wives. Men remain the primary decision-makers in Africa, so young girls, their families, communities and economies all benefit from this new understanding.

Please accept our sincere gratitude for your support!

It remains critical to GSGC’s life-changing work. Together, in the last fiscal year, we accomplished the following:

• More than 425 girls have entered or stayed in school because of GSGC support.
• Fifty-seven volunteers contributed 2,565 hours, valued at $59,175.
• Items valued at $10,250 were donated and distributed to the organizations and the girls.
• Our eight highly effective partners shared best practices with each other and with complementary grassroots organizations.
• Forty-three outside groups collaborated with GSGC and its partners.
• Eighty men and boys participated in powerful workshops that documented the value of educating girls.
• The ripple effect from all these interventions? Invaluable.
